

Scouting Report:

SANDIGI JOBE

Sandigi Zacky Jobe (1998) is a powerful and versatile player with extensive Ettan experience, capable of performing at a high level both as a centre-back and as a central midfielder. Standing at 189 cm, he combines size, strength, and composure on the ball, making him a valuable presence in multiple areas of the pitch. His natural athleticism allows him to dominate in physical duels on the ground, while his intelligence in pressing makes him an aggressive defender who can win back possession in important areas.

What makes Sandigi particularly effective is his ability to transition smoothly from defense to attack. He plays out of the back with confidence, rarely panicking under pressure, and is comfortable distributing the ball short or long to advance his team forward. Unlike many defenders of his profile, he shows calm decision-making and technical ability that allows him to contribute to controlled build-up play. His versatility means he can seamlessly move into midfield when needed, using his strength and presence to break up play and keep possession circulating.

In addition to his defensive and midfield qualities, Sandigi offers a unique attacking weapon. His exceptionally long throw-ins can turn any set-piece situation into a direct chance on goal, adding an extra dimension to his team's offensive arsenal. This makes him a player who not only secures defensive stability but also creates unexpected opportunities in the attacking third.

While Sandigi already displays the qualities of a complete modern defender and midfielder, there are still areas where further development could elevate his game. His weaker foot can be improved to make him even more unpredictable when playing out under pressure and to increase his range of passing options. With refinement in this area, he has the potential to establish himself firmly at the level of first or second tier football in the Scandinavian market, as well as in competitive leagues in the Middle East or Asia.

Overall, Sandigi Zacky Jobe is a composed yet physically dominant presence, combining strength, intelligence, and versatility. With his blend of defensive solidity, transitional ability, and offensive threat from long throws, he is the kind of player who can change the dynamics of a game and serve as a cornerstone in any ambitious squad.
